Important information

Gombe Stream National Park Nestled along the eastern shores of Lake Tanganyika in western Tanzania, Gombe Stream National Park is a place of remarkable natural beauty and scientific significance. Renowned as the site of Dr Jane Goodall's groundbreaking chimpanzee research, Gombe is the smallest of Tanzania's national parks but one of its most captivating.

This lush, mountainous sanctuary is a haven for wild chimpanzees, offering visitors a rare opportunity to observe them in their natural habitat. Trekking through the verdant forests, you'll encounter not only these intelligent primates but also olive baboons, red-tailed and colobus monkeys, along with a rich variety of birdlife and butterflies.

The park's landscape, characterised by steep valleys, streams, and dense forests, descends dramatically into the crystal-clear waters of Lake Tanganyika, inviting moments of relaxation and reflection after a rewarding trek.

A visit to Gombe Stream National Park is both an adventure and a journey into the heart of primate conservation, where visitors gain a profound appreciation for the delicate balance between nature, wildlife, and humanity.
